

Learning Strategy – Pronunciation Training Learning Strategies

There are several ways to improve your foreign language pronunciation. Which strategy you choose will depend on the following, among others:

- your native language,
- the foreign languages you have already learned,
- the foreign language training you have already received,
- your personal habits and preferences (learning type and style),
- the degree of your motivation as well as the particular situation.

Here are some possibilities. Make a check mark in the appropriate box.

- Which techniques are you already using?
- Which techniques have you not tried yet?
- Which techniques are not really appropriate for you for personal, cultural or organizational reasons?
- Which techniques do you want to try in the future?

	I have done this	I haven't done this yet	Not relevant for me	I will try this
In order to plan, organize and control my learning ...
I consider what problems with pronunciation I have, and which ones I would like to tackle first before I practice.
I do as many audio activities as possible.
I get recommendations for appropriate practice material.
I arrange that I can work without being disturbed or distracted.
In order to prepare phonetic listening and to train hearing ...
I choose texts that I already know.
In order to improve my pronunciation through imitation ...
I listen to words that are difficult to pronounce frequently and say them out loud until I feel that my pronunciation is similar enough to the original.
In order to remember the articulation of new vocabulary ...
I make a note of the accented part of new words.
In order to become conscious of the pronunciation of the foreign language and in order to have long-term success in my pronunciation ...
I try to understand the pronunciation and intonation rules.
